José Gutierrez is a third-generation coffee producer whose passion for coffee cultivation brought him back to coffee nearly 25 years after his family stopped producing coffee in the 1980s. In 2005, José, inspired by the growing interest in specialty coffee and higher quality, returned to coffee production with great excitement.

Today, José continues to focus on producing high-quality coffee on his farm in the Apaneca-Illamatepec mountain range. Fertile clay soils and environment-focused agriculture support José's passion for specialty coffee.

Don't be fooled by El Salvador's small size. It was once the 4th largest coffee producer worldwide and continues to produce high quality lots. The country is known for its great cupping varieties, such as Bourbon and Pacamara. In fact, two beloved, frequently high-scoring varieties—Pacas and Pacamara— originated in El Salvador.
